BATTLE PLAN OF BUNKER HILL.

HISTORICAL DOCUMENT OF GREAT INTEREST.

	Plan of the redoubt, erected by the American Colonists, 16th-17th June, 1775 ; under the direction of their Colonel Warren, who was killed in the fight. Also, showing the positions of the Royal and Colonial forces, landing points, face of the country, roads, &c.	195	0	0

Plan of the fort erected by the Colonists at the junction of the rivers Allegani and Monogahela, Pennsylvania, on the site of what is now Pittsburg.

The document, which is slightly larger than illustration, is signed by Major-General Sir Henry Clinton. The maps and descriptive particulars are by pen and brush, and are accompanied by an engraved portrait, by Bartolozzi, of General Clinton.

The whole framed in an ebonized frame

 Battle at the redoubt on Breed's Hill, Boston, Massachusetts, U.S.A.—commonly referred to as Bunker Hill—on 17*th June,* 1775.

This celebrated engagement was fought between the Royal troops of George III., under Howe, and the Colonists who were striving for independence, and were led by their Colonel Prescott.

During the night of the 16*th June, the Colonists, led by their Colonel, made their way with dark lanterns, spades, and necessary tools to the top of Breed's Hill; about 110 feet above sea level, and overlooking Boston.*

Before daybreak the Colonists had erected a redoubt, with embankments, some six feet in height; and, on its longest face, fifty yards in length.

On day breaking the structure was seen by the British vessels anchored in the adjoining river; and with the cannon on the opposite shore an immediate bombardment of the redoubt commenced.

Later, in the warm afternoon, at about 3 p.m., the British forces attempted to obtain possession of the redoubt; advancing from the landing place at the shore base of the hill.

Twice the Royal troops were repulsed by the fire of the Colonists; the third attempt being successful—perhaps owing to the fact that the defenders had but two rounds of ammunition remaining, and that obtained by opening some cannon cartridges.

General Sir Henry Clinton (afterwards Governor of Gibraltar where he died 23*rd Dec.,* 1795*), who signed the battle map above referred to, was in command of Howe's left on the other side of the river, preparing his force for action. Seeing two regiments which had been turned back standing about in a disorganised and confused state, he jumped into a boat, and, on reaching the men, rearranged their ranks, revived their courage, and, as Trevelyan says, "placed himself far enough in their front for everyone to see how an old aide-de-camp of the fighting Prince of Brunswick stepped up a glacis."*

*The losses were, for such a small affair, lasting only about an hour and a half, very heavy. The British lost one thousand and forty; of whom ninety-two held the King's Commission—one hundred and fifty-seven officers being wounded and killed. The Colonists, in and around the redoubt, lost one hundred and fifteen dead; and they had some three hundred wounded; also they abandoned three of their four cannon.

Forces engaged: British, about 2,500; with later 400 Marines. Colonists, about 1,500, with four cannon.

The British finally held "Bunker" Hill.

* Another account states the Colonists had six cannon, losing five; agreeing with the note on the map.
